

THE GREEK CITY STATES and TRAGEDY: 10/5/09

Goals of the lecture

- 1) to give a broad account of Greek history and especially the rise to dominance of Athens.
- 2) to suggest that the “golden age” of Athens was more complex and Athenian imperialism less benign than Pericles’ funeral speech makes it seem.
- 3) to discuss some functions of tragedy in Athens and very brief details of its form and offer a few points of interest in some of our set texts (Herodotus, Thucydides and Euripides’ Trojan Women).

Brief Timeline of Greek history: all dates BCE

- c.2000 – emergence of first palaces on Crete
- c. 1700 – second phase of palaces: great age of Minoan civilisation.
- c. 1450 – Myceneans take over on Crete (Linear B script)
- c. 1200 – presumed date of the Trojan war
- c.1200 – gradual destabilisation in Crete and the rest of the Greek world, leading to so-called “Dark Age”
- 900-c. 650 BC - aristocratic rule
- c.800 onwards - Greek colonisation through Mediterranean and beyond
- c.735-15 – Sparta enslaves its neighbours (the helots)

Some important authors

- Homer – (?) somewhere between 850 and 750 B.C.E.
- Hesiod (?) 8th century BC: Works and Days; Theogony
- Sappho (late 7th/early 6th century): poems
- Solon (late 7th/early 6th century): poems
- Euripides (c. 485-406): Trojan Women and 18 other extant plays
- Herodotus (c.484-after 430): History of the Persian Wars
- Thucydides (c.460-400); History of the Peloponnesian War

Some useful secondary reading

The Oxford Classical Dictionary (3rd edition): an invaluable starting point for virtually everything Early Greece (London, 1980) by Oswyn Murray. Extremely readable account of a period of history about which very little is known for sure.

The Greek World, 479-323 (London, 1983) by Simon Hornblower. Very well-written and succinct account by one of the best in the business.

The historical novels of Mary Renault (The Praise Singer; The Mask of Apollo; The Last of the Wine) will also give you a great idea of what it was like.
